NEWS RELEASE

Modus Operandi Announces New VP of Business Development

MELBOURNE, Florida, Dec. 4, 2007 – Modus Operandi, a leading software and information integration technology company, announced the appointment of George Eanes as the new Vice President of Business Development. He will be a member of the senior management team and involved in the formulation and execution of Modus Operandi's business growth strategy. His primary focus will be on business development and sales activities spanning both new and existing customer relationships.

George has a broad market background covering federal government, commercial, and international business. His initial focus at Modus Operandi will be on growing federal sector business. George came most recently from Tybrin Corporation. Previously, he was at FYI, a small local software technology company, and prior to that was in business development at Harris Corporation for five years. Before Harris, George worked in both the U.S. and overseas at several subsidiaries of TECO and as the managing director of Hobart Brothers operations in Singapore. George has a B.B.A. in Business Management from the University of Texas.

Commenting on this new appointment, Modus Operandi President and CEO, Peter Dyson, said, "George will be a great asset to our company and our customers. His background, experience and leadership skills are an excellent addition to our world class team and will help in building new and current customer relationships."
